Announcement on the English Proficiency Test for First-year Master's Students in the 110th Academic Year

Jul. 8, 2021

- 1. According to the Guide to the Admission by Recommendation and Screening into Doctoral Programs at National Central University (NCU), the Guide to the Admission into Master's Programs at NCU, and the Guide to the Admission into Master's Programs of the University System of Taiwan in the 110th Academic Year (2021), each department/institute should hold an English proficiency (TOEFL ITP) test for new first-year master's students on a selected date per the department/institute's regulations. If there is any change of test type, the change will be announced after the school enrollment in the 110th academic year.
- 2. New first-year master's students that should take the English proficiency test held for them include new first-year master's students (including international students) enrolled into NCU in the 110th academic year, master's students who were enrolled in and before the 109th academic year and have suspended their schooling or have kept their student status, and master's students who resume their status as first-year master's students in the 110th academic year (excluding the students who had taken the English proficiency test in their first year since their enrollment but failed to pass the test).
- 3. Per the resolution of the third meeting of NCU's Admission Committee in the 110th academic year, a unified English proficiency test for new first-year master's students is canceled as of the 110th academic year. Each college may stipulate its own relevant measures to improve its students' English proficiency. Students who asked for leave in the last academic year (the 109th) should follow the test-related regulations stipulated by their college (students who asked for leave in the 109th academic year should inquire about the matter from their department/institute).
- 4. Relevant regulations for the English proficiency test for new first-year master's students at each department/institute/college are listed as follows:

Note 1: Students at the department/institute do not have to take the English proficiency test for new first-year master's students.
